Professor Geoffrey Shen, Hong Kong Polytechnic University

Value for money in large and complex construction projects

Large and complex construction projects have the tendency to run out of costs easily. Considering the two or three famous negative examples in Germany (Airport Berlin-Brandenburg, Stuttgart 21 or Elbphilharmonie) it is interesting to hear how value for money in construction projects can be assured in other regions like in Hong Kong.

Geoffrey Shen is professor of construction management at the Hong Kong Polytechnic University and will present the various initiatives to ensure value for money in large and complex construction projects in his hometown. The presentation is full of findings from research and development that have been conducted over the last 20 years, supplemented with real life case studies of infrastructure and building projects.
